

Black, David. 2018. "A benefit concert in Vienna for Constanze Mozart (23 Dec 1791)." In: Mozart: New Documents, edited by Dexter Edge and David Black. First published 3 Apr 2018; updated 7 Nov 2025. [direct link]

---

A benefit concert in Vienna for Constanze Mozart (23 Dec 1791)

David Black

Münchener Zeitung, no. 205, Thu, 29 Dec 1791, 1082

[1082]

Wien, vom 24. Dez. (Aus Privatbriefen.)

Billig war es von der Kaiserstadt zu erwarten, daß sie sich am ersten bestreben würde, der zurückgelassenen Wittwe unseres verewigten Tonsetzers Mozarts thätige Unterstützung angedeihen zu lassen. Sie that es gestern zum Erstenmale mittheil einer großen musikalischen Akademie zum Vortheil der Wittwe, in welcher sich unsere vornehmsten Tonkünstler, Sänger, und Sängerinnen gleichsam um die Wette hören ließen. Das Auditorium war sehr zahlreich, und man schätzt, daß gegen 1000 Gulden eingegangen sein mögen, ausser dem was der Hof beisteuerte. Es ist der Antrag, jährlich an Mozarts Sterbetag eine ähnliche Akademie zu veranstalten. Die ungestochenen unbekanntenen Werke dieses großen Meisters werden izt überall aufgesucht, und um hohes Geld verkauft. Mitunterlaufen dann natürlicher Weise auch Werke anderer Meister, die man für Mozartische ausgiebt. — [...]

Wien, vom 24. Dez. (Aus Privatbriefen.)
Billig war es von der Kaiserstadt zu erwarten, daß sie sich am ersten bestreben würde, der zurúfgelassenen Wittwe unseres verewigten Tonsezers Mozart thätige Unterstützung angedeihen zu lassen. Sie that es gestern zum Erstenmale mittelst einer großen musikalischen Akademie zum Vor-theil der Wittve, in welcher sich unsere vornehmsten Tonkünstler, Sänger, und Sangerinnen gleichsam um die Wette hören ließen. Das Auditorium war sehr zahlreich, und man schätzt, daß gegen 1000 Gulden eingegangen sein mögen, auffer dem was der Hof beisteuerte. Es ist der Antrag, jährlich an Mozarts Sterbetag eine ähn-liche Akademie zu veranstalten. Die ungestöche-nen unbekanntten Werke dieses großen Meisters werden igt überall aufgesucht, und um hohes
Geld verkauft. Mitunterlaufen dann natürlicher Weise auch Werke anderer Meister, die man für Mozartische ausgiebt. — Nachdem die der Ers

[translation:]

Vienna, 24 Dec. (From private letters.)

It was reasonable to expect of the imperial city, that it would be the first to strive to grant active support to the forsaken widow of our immortal composer Mozart. It did so yesterday for the first time with a grand musical academy for the benefit of the widow, in which our most prominent musicians, and male and female singers competed, as it were, to be heard. The audience was very numerous, and it was estimated that around 1000 gulden may have been taken in, in addition to what the court contributed. It has been proposed to hold a similar academy every year on the date of Mozart's death. The unengraved and unknown works of this great master are now sought everywhere, and sell for high prices. Mingled among these naturally are works by other masters that are passed off as Mozart's. — [...]

---

Commentary

Mozart's death on 5 Dec 1791 left his widow Constanze in a plight: in addition to caring for a four-month-old baby and a seven-year-old child, she had to assist in the settlement of Mozart's estate and seek an income that could provide for the family's future. Fortunately, the quick dissemination of the news of Mozart's death and reports of the family's perilous financial circumstances (Dokumente 371, 373; Neue Folge, 74) meant that there was assistance from a number of quarters; Der Heimliche Botschafter reported on 16 Dec that: "Alles wetteifert um Mozarts hinterlassene Wittwe, ihren Verlust einigermassen zu ersetzen, und sie zu trösten" ("Everyone is competing to compensate Mozart's widow in some way for her loss and to console her"; Dokumente, 374). It appears that Baron van Swieten and perhaps Countess Thun took responsibility for the children (Dokumente 371, 374–75), Schikaneder organized a performance of Die Zauberflöte for Constanze's benefit (Dokumente, 374), and on 18 Dec, Archduke Maximilian Franz gave Constanze 24 ducats (108 fl) before his departure from Vienna (see 18 Dec 1791). Constanze also appealed to the Emperor (see below

In addition to direct financial support, there were musical events to commemorate Mozart: the exequies for Mozart held on 10 Dec at St. Michael (Neue Folge, 74–75), and in Prague on 14 Dec at St. Nicholas (Dokumente, 374–76; Addenda, 75; Neue Folge, 78). But there were soon efforts in Vienna to mount what was evidently a major benefit concert for the widow and her children. One report on this concert has long been known through its publication in Dokumente, but the commentary is unsatisfactory and the concert has not received the attention it deserves in the literature. With the discovery of a number of other supporting sources, there is now no reason to doubt the concert took place.

The newly uncovered report above is part of a complex of related reports on the benefit concert that appeared in at least six newspapers in late Dec 1791 and early Jan 1792. In order of publication, these are:

(a) A report in the Brünner Zeitung on 28 Dec 1791 (with a dateline of 24 Dec), first noted by Brauneis (1991, 167; Neue Folge, 78). This report was reprinted in the Auszug on 31 Dec 1791.

(b) The report transcribed above, in the Münchener Zeitung on 29 Dec 1791 (also with a dateline of 24 Dec). Compared to (a), there are minor variants of wording and spelling, and the report omits the value of the court's contribution (150 ducats) and the (erroneous) claim that the Emperor Leopold II granted Constanze the full value of Mozart's salary as a pension. However, the passage on the popularity of Mozart's music (beginning "Die ungestochenen unbekanntten Werke") is found in no other source.

(c) A report in the Pressburger Zeitung on 31 Dec 1791 with a dateline five days later than (a) and (b) (Dokumente, 379; differences from the transcription in Dokumente are given in red):

Wien, den 29ten Dezemb. [...]

Wien, den 29ten Dezemb. Die

Die Wittid [sic] Mozard hat zu ihrem Vortheile die allerhöchste Erlaubniß er=

Die Wittib Mozard hat zu ihrem Vortheile die allerhöchste Erlaubniß er= halten, vergangenen Freytag eine musikalische Akademie im Nationaltheater geben zu dürfen, bey welcher nicht nur allein der gesammte Hof sondern auch eine zahlreiche Menge von Publikum sich einfanden; vom Hofe aus hat sie 150 Dukaten erhalten, und in allem belieft sich ihre Einnahme auf 1500 Gulden.

halten, vergangenen Freytag eine musikalische Akademie im Nationaltheater geben zu dürfen, bey welcher nicht nur allein der gesammte Hof sondern auch eine zahlreiche Menge von Publikum sich einfanden; vom Hofe aus hat sie 150 Dukaten erhalten, und in allem belieft sich ihre Einnahme auf 1500 Gulden.

This abbreviated report uniquely gives the location of the concert: the Nationaltheater (that is, the Burgtheater). Compared to the other reports, it also gives a different account of Constanze's income from the concert (see below).

(d) An abbreviated report in the Augsburgische Ordinari Postzeitung on 31 Dec 1791 (with a dateline of 24 Dec):

Wien, den 24. Dec.

Unser gütige Monarch hat der Wittwe Mozarts die ganze Pension ihres Mannes gelassen. Gestern nahm sie aus einem Concert, das ihr zum Besten gegeben wurde, fl. 1000. ein.

Die größten Tonkünstler und Sänger
liessen sich dabey hören. [...]

Wien, den 24. Dec.
Unser gütige Monarch hat der Wittwe Mozarts die ganze Pension ihres Mannes gelassen. Gestern nahm sie aus einem Concert, das ihr zum Besten gegeben wurde, fl. 1000. ein. Die größten Tonkünstler und Sänger liessen sich dabey hören. — Ob der

Like (a), this report makes the claim - probably incorrect - that Leopold II had granted Constanze a pension (see below).

(e) A report in Lorenz Hübner's Salzburg journal Oberdeutsche Staatszeitung on 3 Jan 1792, first noted in Neumayr (2011, 189).

This version is close but not identical to the wording of (a). The report also adds an account of the Latin inscription supposedly found on Mozart's tomb, slightly truncated from the version printed in the Wiener Zeitung (Dokumente, 379).

(f) A reference to the concert in the Weimar Journal des Luxus und der Moden, Apr 1792, 192; first noted in Link 1998, 182.

In the list of "Aufgeführte Stücke auf den beyden Kaiserl. Königl. Hof=Theatern", the "National=Theater" has "am 23. eine große musikalische Akademie, zum Benefiz der Wittve Mozart." As Link notes, the list for the "Kärntner=Thor=Theater" also has an identical entry on 23 Dec (195). While (a), (b) and (d) are silent on the location of the concert, (c) states it took place in the "Nationaltheater," so the presence of the concert in the Journal's listings for the Kärntnertortheater is probably a mistake.

The concert appears to have been mounted at the suggestion of the Emperor Leopold II, who is said to have held an audience with Constanze soon after Mozart's death. According to Niemetschek, Constanze had decided to request a pension, and in response to rumors that Mozart had left excessive debts, she told the Emperor that 3000 fl would be sufficient to clear them:

"Wenn es so ist", sagte der Monarch, "da ist wohl noch Rath zu schaffen. Geben Sie ein Konzert von seinen hinterlassenen Werken, und ich will es unterstützen."

[...]
Die Akade=
mie ward unternommen, und der unsterbliche Monarch erfüllte so groß= müthig sein Versprechen, daß die Wittve dadurch in den Stand ge= setzt wurde, die Schulden ihres Mannes zu tilgen.

[Niemetschek 1798, 40]

"If it really is as you say," said the Monarch, "then there is still time to do something for you. Let a concert be given of the works he left, and I will support it."

[...]

The concert

was given, the immortal Monarch fulfilled his generous promise, and the widow was thereby enabled to pay off her husband's debts.

[trans. from Niemetschek 1956, 49]

No other independent source for the audience with the Emperor is known, but a petition to Leopold II survives dated 11 Dec 1791 in which Constanze asked for a pension for herself and the children (Dokumente, 371–72; see Eibl 1966). A small pension was eventually granted by the new Emperor Franz II in Mar 1792 (Dokumente, 391).

In preparing for the concert, Constanze could take advantage of an unexpected opportunity. It was unusual for the Burgtheater to be available on 23 Dec for a private benefit concert, for on 22 and 23 Dec each year the theater was normally reserved for the Advent fundraising academies of the Tonkünstler-Societät (TKS). The TKS planned their Advent 1791 concerts to feature the soprano Cecilia Giuliani (fl. 1778–92), whom Emperor Leopold II had hired as part of his attempt to establish an opera seria troupe in Vienna (see Rice 1987; Wuchner 2017, 432 mistakenly has Catarina Cavalieri as the planned singer). Giuliani had made her Viennese operatic debut in Nasolini's Teseo a Stige on 24 Nov, but the next day she was laid low with "a real illness of the throat, very dangerous to her voice" (as she described it in a notice in the Wiener Zeitung on 17 Dec explaining her absence), and she had to withdraw from following performances (Giuliani's notice is quoted in Rice 2017, 38).

Playbill for the planned performance of Teseo a Stige on 25 Nov 1791, with additional notice announcing the substitution of Dutillieu's Il trionfo d'amore due to Giuliani's illness (Vienna, Theatermuseum; photo: Michael Lorenz)

It appears that the TKS decided to cancel its concerts due to Giuliani's illness; strangely, the minutes that presumably recorded this decision do not survive, but it is known from a list of reasons the TKS gave when it applied to give two substitute concerts in Apr 1792 (according to the copy in Vienna, Wiener Stadt- und Landesarchiv, Haydn-Verein A 2/1, 7 Nov 1792; we are grateful to Michael Lorenz for this information and transcription):

2tns daß selbst der Gesellschaft schon ein namhafter Schaden erwachsen ist; indem sie erst im verflossenen Advent das Unglück hatte, wegen unvermutheter Krankheit einer Sängerin (der Mlle: Giuliani) eben diese zur Subsistenz ihres Fonds höchst nothwendige Akademien zu unterlassen.

2nd: that the Society itself has already suffered considerable damage, for it was only in the past Advent that it had the misfortune to refrain from [holding] these academies, which are most necessary for the maintenance of its fund, due to the unexpected illness of a singer, Mlle Giuliani.

The minutes do not mention what music the TKS had been planning to perform during Advent 1791, but it may have been Weigl's "cantata" Venere e Adone. Giuliani had created the role of Venere in this work when it was performed at Esterháza on 3 Aug 1791, and the TKS eventually performed it (without Giuliani's involvement) on 22 Dec 1792.

Giuliani's misfortune was Constanze Mozart's gain, for Constanze was able to secure a concert that was strikingly similar in nature to the TKS concert usually held on 23 Dec: like the TKS event, this concert was charitable in function, intended to support a widow and her children, and supported by both public and court patronage. It is not clear how the Viennese were informed of the concert: no newspaper notices advertising the concert are known, and if a poster was printed, no copies survive. But Constanze could rely on the memories of the music-loving public, who expected a TKS academy at the Burgtheater on 23 Dec, and the understandable sympathy for her in the wake of Mozart's unexpected and untimely death. Constanze was ineligible for any pension from the TKS itself as her husband had never completed the application process (Dokumente, 385).

The reports give no details about what music was performed at the concert, although of course it is likely that Mozart's works featured prominently. Niemetschek (1798, 38–39) mentions a public concert mounted by Constanze in Vienna that featured "die merkwürdige Seelenmesse"; this probably refers to the performance of the Requiem K. 626 on 2 Jan 1793 (Dokumente, 409). However, given that some form of the work had already been performed at St. Michael on 10 Dec 1791, it cannot be ruled out that the Requiem was heard again on 23 Dec.

The reports likewise provide no specific information about the performers, beyond the statement that "our most prominent musicians, and male and female singers raced, as it were, to be heard." Likely candidates are the singers of the court opera and perhaps the other theaters, the musicians of the Hofkapelle, and members of the TKS. The forces could have been under the direction of Salieri, who often directed the TKS concerts, or perhaps Weigl, who was appointed Kapellmeister of the court opera the following week. In the week of 24–30 December 1791, the Burgtheater administration paid the piano maker Anton Walter 18fl for the rent of a piano, which could conceivably have been associated with Constanze's concert (Steblyn 2015, 327).

The reports are not entirely consistent about the income from the concert. Reports (a), (b) and (e) rather hedge their bets, saying "it was estimated that around 1000 gulden may have been taken in," while (d) is unequivocal on that amount. Three reports, however, state that the court also contributed, with (a) and (e) giving its contribution as 150 ducats (675 fl). In total, then, these reports indicate a gross income of about 1700 fl. Report (c) takes a different tack, stating the gross was 1500 fl, including 150 ducats from the court. 150 ducats is a very large gift, comparing favorably to the 50 ducats the former Emperor Joseph II usually gave for each pair of TKS concerts (Pohl 1871, 28); it may represent contributions by multiple noble donors, not just the "support" promised by Leopold II. In terms of ticket sales exclusive of gifts from the court (about 1000 fl according to the majority of reports, or 800 fl according to (c)), the figures imply a very well-attended concert. The largest receipts of any TKS concert during this period were for the premiere of Kozeluch's oratorio Moisè in Egitto on 22 Dec 1787, which realized 800 fl 22 kr with an attendance of perhaps 925 (Edge 1996, 80n45).

Whatever the precise amount, the income from this concert, plus Maximilian Franz's gift and the benefit performance of Die Zauberflöte (from which Constanze received perhaps around 400 fl; see our discussion for 5 Oct 1791) would have netted a substantial sum. There was more to come: on 28 Dec, Constanze wrote to offer Maximilian Franz scores of Die Zauberflöte and La Clemenza di Tito for 100 ducats (450 fl) each, to which the Archduke may have responded positively (see 18 Dec 1791). The same day, another successful benefit concert for Constanze was held in Prague at the Nationaltheater, with a "considerable" income (Niemetschek 1798, 38). There is some confusion in Dokumente (377) about the location and chronology of the Vienna and Prague benefit concerts, which has been carried over into more recent literature (see Finke 2013, 321, which wrongly gives Prague as the location of the concert on 23 Dec, and Abert/Eisen 2007, 1312n34 which wrongly associates (c) with a later Prague concert of 7 Feb 1794). The report also mentions a proposal to hold a similar academy annually on the date of Mozart's death. This did not eventuate, but there were a variety of commemorative concerts for Mozart in Austria, Bohemia, and Germany over the next few years (see Brauneis 1992, and our entries for 31 Jan 1792, 19 Feb 1792, and 18 Mar 1792).

The report concludes with an interesting observation about the popularity of Mozart's music, the high prices now demanded for it, and attempts to pass off music by others as Mozart's. The account is entirely plausible: then, as now, the death of an artist often leads to a surge in the popularity of their work. But it is hard to verify on the meager evidence we have. The earliest known posthumous Viennese advertisements for Mozart's music were for competing editions of numbers from Die Zauberflöte from Artaria and Kozeluch on 7 and 17 Dec, with Artaria demanding slightly higher prices for the same music (Dokumente, 369, 374). This was followed on 28 Dec by Artaria's first edition of the Quartets K. 575, 589, and 590 (376). Artaria charged 3 fl for the three quartets, which is comparable with the unusually high 6 fl 30 kr it charged for the six "Haydn" quartets in 1785 (221).

---

Bibliography (↑)

- Abert, Hermann. 2007. W. A. Mozart. Edited by Cliff Eisen. Translated by Stewart Spencer. New Haven: Yale University Press.
- Brauneis, Walther. 1991. "Unveröffentlichte Nachrichten zum Dezember 1791 aus einer Wiener Lokalzeitung." In: Mitteilungen der Internationalen Stiftung Mozarteum 39 (1991). 165-168.
- . 1992. "Mozarts Nachruhm." In: Wiener Geschichtsblätter 47. 1–21.
- Eibl, Josef Heinz. 1966. "Zum Pensions-Gesuch Konstanzes vom 11. Dezember 1791." In: Mitteilungen der Internationalen Stiftung Mozarteum 14 (1966), 3/4. 4–8.
- Edge, Dexter. 1996. "Mozart's Reception in Vienna, 1787–1791". In: Wolfgang Amadè Mozart: Essays on His Life and His Music, edited by Stanley Sadie, 66–117. Oxford: Clarendon Press.
- Finke, Gesa. 2013. Die Komponistenwitwe Constanze Mozart. Vienna: Boehlau Verlag.

Link, Dorothea. 1998. The National Court Theatre in Mozart's Vienna: Sources and Documents, 1783–1792. Oxford: Clarendon Press.

Niemetschek, Franz Xaver. 1798. Leben des. K. K. Kapellmeisters. Wolfgang Gottlieb Mozart, nach. Originalquellen beschrieben. Prague: in der Herrlichen Buchhandlung.

———. 1956. Life of Mozart. Translated by Helen Mautner. London: L. Hyman.

Neumayr, Eva. 2011. "Quellen zur Rezeption des Requiems von W. A. Mozart in Salzburg im frühen 19. Jahrhundert." In: Mozart Jahrbuch 2009/10. Kassel: Bärenreiter. 187–209.

Pohl, C. F. 1871. Denkschrift aus Anlass des hundertjährigen Bestehens der Tonkünstler-Societät. Vienna: Selbstverlag des "Haydn", in Commission bei Carl Gerold's Sohn.

Rice, John A. 1987. "Emperor and impresario: Leopold II and the transformation of Viennese musical theater, 1790-1792." PhD diss., University of California at Berkeley.

———. 2017. "Nasolini's Teseo a Stige (1791) and the Return of Opera Seria to Vienna." at [academia.edu]

Steblyn, Rita. 2015. "Harpichord or Fortepiano? New Archival Documents about Keyboard Instruments Purchased by the Viennese Court Theater in the Late Eighteenth Century." In: Mozart-Studien vol. 23, ed. Manfred Hermann Schmid. Wien: Hollitzer Verlag. 307-333.

Wuchner, Emily M. 2017. "The Tonkünstler-Societät and the Oratorio in Vienna, 1771–1798." PhD diss., University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

---

Credit: DB

Author: David Black

Link(s): Google Books; BSB

Search Term: mozart

Source Library: BSB, Bavar. 4646 y-1791

Categories: Biography, Reception, Corrigenda

First Published: Tue, 3 Apr 2018

Updated: Fri, 7 Nov 2025

Citation:

Black, David. 2018. "A benefit concert in Vienna for Constanze Mozart (23 Dec 1791)." In: Mozart: New Documents, edited by Dexter Edge and David Black. First published 3 Apr 2018; updated 7 Nov 2025. [direct link]